Grover Cleveland.

GROVER CLEVELAND, the only Democratic President elected by the people since James Buchanan was succeeded by Abraham Lincoln in March, 1861, embracing a period of forty-seven years up to the present time, is no more. He passed away at his home in Princeton, N. J., last Wednesday, under the shadows of the great university, which knew and loved him so well.

Twice President of our country, Grover Cleveland's true worth and greatness has never been properly appreciated by his countrymen. Now, that he is dead future generations will accord to his name and memory that which was denied him while living. Grover Cleveland, while not a martyr or a soldier, was a hero statesman. He was this if nothing else. He faced the serious problems which confronted him upon his accession to the Presidency with true courage and statesmanship and his enforcement of the Monroe Doctrine showed the metal of the true American.

There was nothing of the time-server in his make up, and, be it said with shame, his own party never fully appreciated his true worth. This was owing no doubt to the fact that the Democratic party, which had held absolute and almost uninterrupted sway over our country up to the days of the Civil War, a period of over three-quarters of a century, had been out of power for twenty-five consecutive years when Grover Cleveland was inaugurated as Chief Magistrate of the nation in 1885. His party associates, intoxicated with the victory which at last had perched upon the banners of the Democracy, after an interval of so many years, expected too much of the man and in their mad scramble for the offices and political preferment paid little heed to the statesman-like qualities of their chief, and as there were not offices enough for all those who had supported him, the disappointed ones, among them being those who attempted to map out and dictate his policies for him, created a division in the Democratic ranks, and as a result both of Grover Cleveland's administrations, with their civil service rules and grand statesman-like qualities, were severely and unjustly criticised by the disgruntled ones of his own party.

So it was with George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. While living, "the father of his country," and "the great emancipator" were outrageously reviled by an ungrateful people. Neither were accorded their just dues until Death had stilled their every action forevermore. Then and not till then did their countrymen realize their true worth and do homage to their greatness.

And so it will be with Grover Cleveland.

Home Life and Home Influence.

In the reports of the rebuilding and rehabilitating of San Francisco it is not the expenditure of millions nor the construction of the massive and imposing skyscrapers that impresses the thoughtful inquirer so much from a heart standpoint. Commercially all this substantial building is of noted importance to the city's progress, but the city's welfare we measure by the amount of home reestablishment and by the great announcement that many people who never knew what a real home was have learned to know and to love that word since they were driven from the holes in the wall of that big city on the morning of the earthquake and conflagration. The dwellers in ill-ventilated lodging houses, in poor tenements and large tumbled-down rendezvous where coal-oil stoves cooked meals and children romped through halls in ill-assorted droves, these were forced to leave this life behind, and lo! once out, it was not there to come back to, and out of catastrophe has grown up new desires and promise of a new kind of living. When provision was made for housing these homeless ones and the refugees' shacks erected for them many came into a greater heritage than they had ever known before. They saw the possibilities of home making and the creating of their own conditions. The home instinct had become dormant in many who had once known it, but the humble fore-shadowing of what might be again for the man or woman who once had a home aroused all that was good within them to make an effort for their loved ones. The thought of going back to the old quarters of pre-earthquake time no longer filled them with joy, and yet were it not for the mighty upheaval and the actual thrusting upon them of the new conditions they would probably never have been awakened to the unhealthy life that was.

Now there is a marked tendency for these families to continue to dwell in humble homes to themselves and in many cases they are building unpretentious but better dwellings than they had in the parks that they may further become units in the city's population. They are no longer to be lost in the droves of great unknowns who, like ants, infested the congested districts of the great metropolis. They are taking to the outlying districts, where rents and lots are cheaper, and there they are reestablishing themselves. Like a blessing in disguise was that disaster, which not only drove them away from the narrow, unhealthy life, but drove from their hearts the desire to be near the tawdry allurements of the down-town side-streets and the congested thoroughfares with their rush-the-growler corners and flotsam neighbors. There, where circumstances had forced them, there was little use for the exercise of mother pride and counsel and little play for the outcropping of good heredity. The effects of that environment took its course and as a result of enforced close association many children who, under the new conditions, would have become good and useful members of society drifted there into hoodlumism and crime.

We may well rejoice at this revivification--this habilitation--for it means much, not only to San Francisco but to mankind in general. The Earl of Beaconsfield has said: "I have always felt that the best security for civilization is the dwelling, and that upon properly appointed and becoming dwellings depends more than anything else the improvement of mankind. Such dwellings are the nursery of all domestic virtues, and without a becoming home the exercise of those virtues is impossible."

A Walk In.

That Taft carries weight you'll admit,
Yet a friend of mine thought it fit
To indulge in a jest, and so did suggest
An absurdity, thinking it wit.
He said Mr. Taft may grow thin
In the run for the office he'll win.
But I said, as I laughed,
Just leave it to Taft,
He'll not run, but simply walk in.

FANTAN AT MACAO.

Gambling House of the Monte Carlo of the East.

Macao, a Portuguese-Chinese port at the mouth of the Canton river, in China, is the Monte Carlo of the East. One must wait until evening to see the famous "fanten" houses. The interiors are brilliantly lighted with oil lamps (for Macao boasts neither electricity nor gas) and furnished with costly Canton blackwood elaborately carved and upholstered in velvet. There are two floors. The coolie class remains on the ground floor, where the actual games take place, but in the room above, immediately over the table in the room below, there is a square "table" with a rail around it and a narrow table furnished with betting books and pencils, cigarettes, etc.

The visitor may take a seat and look down at the game, which really seems fair and simple. A man sits at the head of the table with a huge heap of brass "cash" before him and a slender wand in his hand. He takes up a handful of the cash and puts it on the table, covering it with a brass hat. Then the betting begins, the bets being laid on the number 1, 2, 3 or 4, after which the banker takes up the hat and counts out the cash in four, separating them with his cane, the number left when the last "four" is removed being the subject of the betting. These houses, numerous as they are, make an enormous income and are a source of large revenue to Macao—Exchange.

JAPANESE PAGODAS.

Enormous Pendulums Render These Old Structures Earthquake Proof.

The only old structures in Japan which seem to be earthquake proof are the pagodas, which were erected before the temples. There are many which are 700 or 800 years old and as solid as when first built.

There is a reason for this, and it lies in their construction. A pagoda is practically a framework of heavy timbers which starts from a wide base and is in itself a substantial structure, but rendered still more stable by a peculiar device. Inside the framework and suspended from the apex is a long, heavy beam of timber two feet thick or more. This hangs from one end of the four sides. Four more heavy timbers, and if the pagoda be very lofty still more timbers, are added to these. The whole forms an enormous pendulum, which reaches within six inches of the ground.

When the shock of an earthquake rocks the pagoda the pendulum swings in unison and keeps the center of gravity always at the base of the framework. Consequently the equilibrium of the pagoda is never disturbed, and this is the explanation of the great age of many of them, when from their height one would suppose them to be peculiarly susceptible to the effects of the earthquake.

France and Fourteen.

So far as France is concerned, it is the number fourteen that has played a conspicuous and portentous part in her history. On May 14, 1554, the Rue de la Ferronnerie was enlarged by order of Henri II., and four times fourteen years later Henri IV. was assassinated there by Ravallac—namely, on May 14, 1610. Henri had lived four times fourteen years, fourteen weeks and four times fourteen days—that is, fifty-six years and five months. Then Henri's son, Louis XIII., died May 14, 1643, the same day and month as his father. And 1643 added together equals fourteen. Just in 1553, the year of the birth of Henri IV., equals fourteen. Louis XIV. ascended the throne 1643, added together, equals fourteen, and similarly the year of his death (1715) equals fourteen.—London P. T. O.

Kept Them All on Edge.

One of the favorite devices of Lord Nelson when ships were cruising in company was to signal to a given craft that Lieutenant Smith or Staff Engineer Brown or Captain of Marines Jones was to take charge, on the assumption that all his superior officers on board had been put out of action. The author of "Trafalgar Re-fought" says that the result was very good, for no one knew when he might be called upon to take command, and every one therefore made a point of trying to make himself fit to carry out the duty should it ever be assigned to him.

Selfish Etiquette.

Some rules in an old book on etiquette seem to encourage a practice commonly called "looking out for No. 1." Here are two of them:

When cake is passed do not finger each piece, but with a quick glance select the best.

Never refuse to taste of a dish because you are unfamiliar with it or you will lose the taste of many a delicacy while others profit by your abstinence, to your lasting regret.

An Electric Dance.

Take a pane of glass—a broken one will do—and secure it by placing the ends between the leaves of two four-hole, letting the glass be two inches from the table. Cut from lightweight writing paper, or better still, from tissue paper, dolls, dogs and other figures. Place them on the table beneath the glass. Rub the glass vigorously with a silk handkerchief, and the figures will cut all kinds of antics.

Just Get It Out.

"Why is the name of goodness," exclaimed a man to an acquaintance, "do you keep talking out your warts? Go out to catch a trail!"

"Well, no," answered the other, "to tell you the truth, I've seen my wart for a long time."

PSYCHIC FORCES.

Their Existence Proved, Yet Scientists Cannot Grasp Them.

I have seen enough to make me believe in Zolner's fourth dimension, but I don't. My mind is so constructed that such wonders as we meet in seances produce very little effect on me. They are as normal to me as the popping of cork or the roasting of potatoes. But as for belief, well, that is not a matter of the will, but of evidence, and the evidence is not yet sufficient to bring me to any definite conclusion. In fact, in the broad day and especially the second day after I have been through one of these experiences I begin to doubt my senses. Richet speaks of this curious recession of belief and admits his own inability to retain the conviction that at the moment of the phenomenon was complete. "No sooner is the sitting over than my doubts come swarming back upon me," he says. "The real world which surrounds us, with its prejudices, its scheme of habitual opinions, holds us in so strong a grasp that we can scarcely free ourselves completely. Certainty does not follow on demonstration, but on habit."

Maxwell says: "I believe in these phenomena, but I see no need to attribute them to any supernatural intervention. I am inclined to think they are produced by some force within ourselves." Just what he means by that I can't precisely explain. It's harder to understand than the spirit hypothesis. He goes on to say that, while he is certain that we are in the presence of an unknown force, he is convinced that the phenomena will ultimately be found orderly, like all other facts of nature. "Some future Newton will discover a more complete formula than ours," he prophesies. "Every natural fact should be studied and, if it be real, incorporated in the patrimony of knowledge." He then adds, with the true scientist's humble acknowledgment of the infinite reach of the undiscovered universe, "Our knowledge is very limited and our experience young."

Try Preventives, At My Risk With Book on Colds.

Just to prove merit—to show you how quickly Preventives can and will check colds or the Grippe—I will mail you free, on request these samples and my book. Simply address—Dr. Shop, Racine, Wis. Preventives are thoroughly harmless little Candy Cold Cure tablets. No Quinine, no laxative, nothing sickening whatever. To check early Colds or Grippe with "Preventions" means sure defeat for Pneumonia. To stop a cold with Preventives is surely safer than to let it run and be obliged to cure it afterward. Preventives will however reach a deeply seated cold. But taken early—at the sneeze stage—when they head off these early colds. That is surely better—that is why they are named "Preventions." Promptness however is all-important. Promptness in the use of Preventives may save half your usual sickness. Feverishness, night or day, with child or adult, suggests the need of Preventives. ies for its strength. And as the considered as a whole is made up of at many organs and organs, so the body is of a consequence of the organs which compose the body. If the body is weak because it is ill-nourished that physical weakness will be found in back and knees, in hands and feet, equally. So also will the weakness be equally distributed among the organs, heart, liver, kidneys, etc., being proportionately weak according to the amount of the reduction of their daily ration of nutrition.

By way of example take the case of the Assistant Treasurer of the Catholic Foresters at Quebec, Mr. Louis Péro, who writes:

"For years after my health began to fail, my head grew dizzy, eyes pained me, and my stomach was sore at all times. Everything I would eat would seem to be heavy like lead on my stomach. The doctors claimed that I was syphilitic, but I felt no pain. My wife advised me to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and I bought a bottle and we soon found that I began to improve. I kept up the treatment. I took on flesh, my stomach became normal, the digestive organs worked perfectly and I soon began to look like a different person. I can never cease to be grateful for what your medicine has done for me and I certainly give it highest praise."

THE SECRET OUT.

To refute the many false and malicious attacks, bogus formulae and other untruthful statements published by competing and disgraced medicine men concerning Dr. Pierce's World-famous Family Medicine, the Doctor has decided to publish all the ingredients entering into his "Golden Medical Discovery." Hereafter every bottle of this medicine bearing the great Laboratory at Buffalo, N. Y., will bear upon it a full list of all the ingredients entering into the compound, printed in plain English.

These ORIGINAL Little Liver Pills, first put up by old Dr. R. V. Pierce over 30 years ago, have been much imitated but never equalled. They're made of purely vegetable, concentrated and refined medicinal principles, extracted from native American roots and plants. They specially relieve and cure foul, torrid and deranged stomachs, Livers and Bowels and their attendant distressful ailments. One or two a laxative, three or four a cathartic.
